Religious poster gains support, official says

Wire

The Greene County Circuit Clerk said Wednesday he had received a number of calls on his decision not to remove from his office a poster bearing the Ten Commandments.

Steve Helms said most of the calls he received after his decision was reported supported him in placing the poster in the lobby of his office and declining to take it down at the request of Springfield resident Gary Wright.

Wright said he believes posting the Ten Commandments in a public building is unconstitutional and has said he might file suit if the poster is not taken down. For now, Wright will try to enlist the help of Americans United for Separation of Church and State, a Washington, D.C., group that handles such issues. He might also write Greene County judges about the poster.
